FREDERICK, MD, October 24, 2019 —North Carolina folk duo, Mandolin Orange bring their fullest, richest, and most personal effort, “Tides of a Teardrop”, to the Weinberg Center for the Arts on Sunday, November 24, 2019 at 7:30 PM.

Mandolin Orange’s last album, 2016’s “Blindfaller,” was their breakout, earning them raves from Vox and NPR Music. The success of singer-songwriter Andrew Marlin and multi-instrumentalist Emily Frantzhaz has steadily built over the years—their catalog has surpassed 100 million streams and they’ve sold out worldwide tours. They have played Red Rocks with the Avett Brothers and they’ve graced the stage of the Ryman, Bonnaroo and the Newport Folk Festival. On “Blindfaller,” they worked for the first time with the group of musicians who have become their touring band. They remain a duo at their core, but the added chemistry has supercharged their bond. Mandolin Orange’s music radiates mysterious warmth. The North Carolina duo have built a steady and growing fan base with this kind of intimacy, and on “Tides of A Teardrop,” it is more potent than ever. You can hear the air between them—the taut space of shared understanding, as palpable as a magnetic field, that makes their music sound like two halves of an endlessly completing thought. They have honed this lamp glow intimacy in their music for years.
