Every show is different, every show is interactive, and every show proves that The Beatles music truly is the soundtrack to our lives.

Stars of Yesterday and Today, Billy and Matthew McGuigan were just 21 and 15 years old when their father, William McGuigan, passed away. Their father owned every Beatles album ever made, even the obscure ones, and shared his love of the Beatles catalogue with his boys. Now, almost thirty years after the passing of their father, Billy, Matthew, and their brother Ryan tour the country with the show, "Yesterday & Today", which is a unique audience interactive concert experience, born out of the idea that everyone, like themselves, has a story or particular memory attached to the legendary music of The Beatles. What the McGuigan boys have overwhelmingly found, since debuting the show in 2007, is that not only do people have a story to tell, but they are ready and willing to tell that story when being able to tie it to their favorite Beatles song. On some level, it goes beyond sheer entertainment, and perhaps becomes a hint of music therapy.
